

Women offenders are a minority group within the criminal justice system, accounting for 15% of the current probation caseload and 5% of the prison population. We recognise...that women offenders differ significantly from their male counterparts and that they often exhibit more complex needs.

Transforming Rehabilitation, Ministry of Justice, May 2013¹

The problem of women in our penal system is a disgrace that does not belong to any one government; it is a disgrace for our society.

The Rt Hon Lord McNally, then Minister of State for Justice with responsibility for women offenders²

The greater energy with which the Government has begun to address the issue of women offenders needs to be...continued...this applies to matters such as reliable funding of women's centres, the effectiveness of rehabilitation provision for women by Community Rehabilitation Companies, and the potential of smaller custodial units. We want to see more effective provision for women offenders, making it possible for there to be a substantial fall in the women's prison population in the coming months and years.

House of Commons Justice Committee, 2015³

A concerted effort is needed to reform the criminal justice system's response to women, and achieve a reduction in women's imprisonment in the UK

Most of the solutions to women's offending lie outside prison walls in treatment for addictions and mental health problems, protection from domestic violence and coercive relationships, secure housing, debt management, education, skills development and employment. Community sentences enable women to take control of their lives, care for their children and address the causes of their offending.

- The women's prison population in England and Wales more than doubled between 1995 and 2010, from 1,979 to 4,267. More recently the numbers have declined by 10% – from 4,279 women in April 2012 to 3,841 in April 2015. Across the UK, more than 13,500 women are imprisoned each year.⁴
- A series of inquiries and reports in recent decades,⁵ most notably the 2000 report of the Prison Reform Trust's Committee on Women's Imprisonment (the Wedderburn Report), the 2007 Review of Women with Particular Vulnerabilities in the Criminal Justice System (the Corston Report), the 2011 report of the Women's Justice Taskforce (Reforming Women's Justice), and the Scottish Government's Commission on Women's Offenders in 2012, have all concluded that prison is rarely a necessary, appropriate or proportionate response to women who get caught up in the criminal justice system. Most recently, the Justice Select Committee, following its inquiry into women offenders, concluded that “prison is an expensive and ineffective way of dealing with many women offenders who do not pose a significant risk of harm to public safety” and called for “a significant increase in residential alternatives to custody as well as the maintenance of the network of women’s centres” seen as “more effective, and cheaper...than short custodial sentences”.⁶ However, despite cross-party support for alternative approaches there has been little progress.

- Because women are such a small minority of those in the criminal justice system, and of the prison population, they are easily overlooked in criminal justice policy, planning, and services.
- The principle of equal treatment does not mean that everyone should be treated the same. Where the underlying circumstances of women and men are different, different approaches may be needed to achieve equitable outcomes. This is a basic tenet of equality law. The provisions of the Equality Act 2010 reflect this and allow for women-only or women-specific services. The Equality Duty requires public services, including those delivered by the private and voluntary sector, to assess and meet the different needs of women and men.⁷ The Justice Committee report concluded that “the duty does not appear to have had the desired impact” on the provision of gender specific services, or on broader policy initiatives.⁸
- The UK is signed up to the United Nations Rules for the Treatment of Women Prisoners and Non-Custodial Measures for Women Offenders (the Bangkok Rules) which require that the distinctive needs of women be recognised. The Rules stress the importance of providing physical and psychological safety for women, and mandate the provision of diversionary measures and sentencing alternatives “taking account of the history of victimisation of many women offenders and their caretaking responsibilities”.⁹
- In its Concluding Observations on the Seventh Periodic Report of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, the UN Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW) urged the UK Government to “vigorously pursue efforts to implement the recommendations of the Corston Report including those contained in the report of the House of Commons Justice Committee published on 15 July 2013 and continue to develop alternative sentencing and custodial strategies, including community interventions and services for women convicted of minor offences.”¹⁰ More recently, reporting at the end of her country mission to the UK – which included visits to women’s prisons - the UN Special Rapporteur on violence against women raised concerns over the disproportionate number of BME women in prison, the number of women who have been subjected to violence prior to their imprisonment, and the number of young women who are incarcerated, and called for the development of “gender-specific sentencing alternatives” and recognition of “women’s histories of victimisation when making decisions about incarceration”.¹¹

There are opportunities now to influence and accelerate the reform agenda

- Five years after the publication of the Corston Report, which made a series of recommendations to drive improvement in the criminal justice system's response to women, the Justice Select Committee in the House of Commons held an inquiry to review progress and examine current strategy and practice with respect to women offenders and those at risk of offending. The inquiry reported in July 2013, with the government response published in October 2013.
- In March 2013 the Ministry of Justice published its 'strategic priorities for female offenders' and set up an Advisory Board for Female Offenders chaired by then Justice Minister Helen Grant.¹² She expressed her determination "to help women into gainful employment and safe environments and off the 'conveyor belt to crime'. This can only be the right thing to do for women in the criminal justice system – and the right thing for their children, for their families and for society."¹³
- The government is implementing a 'rehabilitation revolution' with the aim of reducing reoffending. The extension of 12 months statutory supervision in the community to offenders serving sentences of less than 12 months disproportionately affects women as the nature of their offending means they are more likely to be imprisoned for the shortest periods. Without specific provision for women there is a significant risk that the changes will have an adverse impact on the majority of women who commit minor offences. Section 10 of the Offender Rehabilitation Act, which places a duty on the Secretary of State for Justice to ensure that arrangements for the supervision or rehabilitation of offenders identify any specific provision for women, provides an important statutory foothold for women's services.¹⁴
- Lord McNally, the then Justice Minister and Deputy Leader in the House of Lords, promised to report back to Parliament in March 2014 on progress towards improved provision for women offenders.¹⁵ In December 2013, he was replaced by Simon Hughes MP, and in March 2014 an update on delivery of the Government's strategic objectives for female offenders was presented to Parliament.¹⁶ In May 2015 Caroline Dinenage MP was appointed Parliamentary Under Secretary of State for Women, Equalities and Family Justice with responsibility for female offenders. Her role will include chairing the Advisory Board on Female Offenders.
- Speaking in Parliament in 2013, the then Secretary of State for Justice committed to ensuring that some of the savings from closing women's prisons will be reinvested in preventing women ending up in trouble, stating that "our aim is to stop people going to prison in the first place."¹⁷

If there are more men than women in prison, shouldn't we start by tackling problems in the male population?

- Many of the issues covered here also affect men in prison to a greater or lesser extent, and most of the Prison Reform Trust's work is in relation to the majority male prison population. History shows that unless there is a specific focus on women they will continue to be disadvantaged as a minority within a male-oriented prison system. As well as the different factors involved in women's offending there are problems with the way the custodial estate is organised for women. For example, security classification is designed for men and only two women's prisons - both of which have been earmarked for closure¹⁸ - are open, restricting opportunities for women to progress and spend time on release on temporary licence. The specific issues involved, and the tendency to marginalise women's needs, means it makes sense to have a particular focus on women's imprisonment.

Isn't public opinion opposed to reforming the way the criminal justice system responds to women?

- There is a substantial body of public support for many of the alternative approaches mentioned here. For example, an ICM poll showed that 80% of 1,000 adults surveyed strongly agreed that local women's centres, where women address the root causes of their crime and do compulsory work in the community should be available.¹⁹ Some of these centres can demonstrate very low reoffending rates compared to short prison sentences.²⁰ In another ICM poll, 73% did not think mothers, particularly those of young children, who commit non-violent crime, should be locked up.²¹ The Prison Reform Trust commissioned a YouGov poll in November 2012 that revealed strong backing for public health measures including treatment for drug addiction, help to stop alcohol misuse, and mental health care.

What are the significant differences between women and men in prison?

- Women entering prison are more likely to have been imprisoned for non-violent offences. In the last quarter of 2014, eight in ten (81%) women entering prison under an immediate custodial sentence had committed non-violent offences, compared to seven in ten men (71%).²² For those entering on remand in 2014, 75% of women and 66% of men were charged with, or convicted of, non-violent offences.²³
- Women are also more likely to be in prison for non-violent offences. At 31st March 2015, 64% of women in prison on remand, and 59% of those under sentence, were there for non-violent crimes. For men in prison, the proportions were 55% and 45% respectively.²⁴ [See page 8 for a discussion of the difference between statistics showing the number of people entering prison and the number of people in prison].

- Theft and handling offences are the biggest single driver to custody for women. Between October-December 2014, for example, more women entered prison under sentence for this offence than for any other.²⁵
- Women in prison are highly likely to be victims as well as offenders. More than half (53%) report having experienced emotional, physical or sexual abuse as a child, compared to 27% of men.²⁶ A similar proportion report having been victims of domestic violence. Both figures are likely to be an under-estimate. Women can become trapped in a vicious cycle of victimisation and criminal activity. Their situation can be worsened by poverty, substance dependency or poor mental health.²⁷ Leaving the relationship doesn't guarantee that domestic violence will stop. The period when a woman is planning or making her exit is often the most dangerous time for her and her children.²⁸
- 31% of women prisoners spent time in care as children, compared with 24% of men.²⁹
- Women's offending is more likely to be prompted by their relationships or by financial concerns. Nearly half of women prisoners (48%) questioned for the Surveying Prisoner Crime Reduction (SPCR) longitudinal survey reported having committed offences to support someone else's drug use, compared to 22% of male prisoners.³⁰ A Cabinet Office study found that 28% of women offenders' crimes were financially motivated, compared to 20% of men's.³¹ Earlier research on mothers in custody found that 38% attributed their offending to 'a need to support their children', single mothers being more likely to cite a lack of money as the cause of their offending than those who were married.³²
- Women prisoners are far more likely to be primary carers of children. The SPCR survey found that six in ten women in prison had (on average two) dependent children.³³ One fifth are lone parents before imprisonment. In 2010, more than 17,000 children were separated from their mothers by imprisonment.³⁴ For eight out of ten children, it's the first time they have been separated from their mums for more than a day or so.³⁵ Fewer than one in ten children whose mother is in prison are cared for by their father in her absence.³⁶ Approximately 40% are cared for by grandparents or other family members, and only 5% remain in their own home.³⁷ A 2011 report highlighted that up to 6,000 children a year are "being forgotten by the state when their mother is sent to prison."³⁸ An earlier study found that 42 women held in HMP Holloway had no idea who was looking after their children, and that 19 children under the age of 16 were looking after themselves.³⁹
- Women are imprisoned further from home and receive fewer visits. This adversely affects their capacity to maintain relationships and family contact. Whilst women are held on average 60 miles from their home or court committal address (compared to 50 miles for men),⁴⁰ the distances are much greater for many women, adding to the complexity and expense of travelling for prison visits. In 2009, 753 women were held over 100 miles away.⁴¹ In Send women's prison the average is 76 miles, Askham Grange the average distance from home is 78 miles, for Drake Hall it is 83 miles, East Sutton Park 91 miles. In Eastwood Park prison, where many of the women sent to prison by courts in Wales go, 20% of women are over 150 miles from home.⁴²

- Research suggests half of all women on remand receive no visits, compared to a quarter of men.⁴³ Prisoners who receive no visits are significantly more likely to reoffend than others.⁴⁴
- Women are more likely than men to report needing help with a drug problem on entry to prison (49% v 29%).⁴⁵ Women prisoners are also more likely than men to associate drug use with their offending. Around 70% of women coming into custody require clinical detoxification compared with 50% of men.⁴⁶
- Alcohol is a significant driver to women's offending. 42% of women prisoners drank alcohol in excess of government guidelines prior to imprisonment, compared to 22% of the adult female population.⁴⁷
- Mental health problems are more prevalent among women in prison. They are nearly twice as likely as men in prison to be identified as suffering from depression (65% versus 37%), and more than three times as likely as women in the general population (19%).⁴⁸ Almost a third (30%) of women in custody had a psychiatric admission prior to entering prison.⁴⁹
- Women are disproportionately likely to harm themselves whilst in prison. In 2014, women accounted for 26% of all self-harm incidents in prison in England and Wales despite representing only 5% of the prison population.⁵⁰ The reasons for this include women's histories of sexual abuse, their distress at separation from their children and mental illness.⁵¹
- The effects on women's lives continue to be felt after their release. Over 30% of women lose their accommodation, and often their possessions, while in prison.⁵² Women prisoners are much less likely than men to have positive employment outcomes on release (8% v 27%).⁵³ As women in prison are twice as likely as men to be serving short sentences,⁵⁴ imprisonment has a disproportionate impact on their employment chances.
- Many foreign national women in prison have been trafficked or coerced into offending. 13% of women in prison are foreign nationals, compared to 11% of men.⁵⁵ A significant proportion of foreign national women in prison are known to have been coerced or trafficked into offending.⁵⁶
- Women entering prison are disproportionately likely to be serving short sentences. In 2014, more than 4,000 women entered prison to serve sentences of 6 months or less. Those entering prison to serve sentences of less than 12 months accounted for 71% of all women entering prison under an immediate custodial sentence in 2014. For males the proportion was 55%.⁵⁷
- Women are more likely than men to be in prison under sentence for a first offence. At 30th June 2013, sentenced women were twice as likely as men (21% v 10%) to have no previous convictions or cautions.⁵⁸

- Short sentences have the worst reoffending outcomes. More than half (51%) of all women leaving prison are reconvicted within 12 months – for those serving sentences of less than 12 months, the reconviction rate rises to 62%.⁵⁹ The extent to which community sentences outperform short spells in prison with respect to reoffending is greater for women than for men (9.7% v 7%).⁶⁰ Women released from custody are also more likely to reoffend, and reoffend quicker than those serving community sentences.⁶¹

What options do courts have when the same women appear before them repeatedly?

The number of ‘prolific’ women offenders is small. Home Office research found that a quarter of male offenders and 8% of female offenders had four or more convictions - these prolific offenders account for the majority of all recorded crime.⁶² Instead of pushing women through a revolving door of prison and reoffending, community sentences offer a practical approach to tackling the root causes of their criminal behaviour. Evaluations of women’s community services have shown that they can provide effective programmes for women offenders and women who are at risk of offending,⁶³ and have been proven to reduce reoffending.⁶⁴ It is important that these services be more widely available so that these options are always available to the courts.

What about those who pose a danger to the public?

For a small minority of women who offend, custody will be the only option. Small custodial units, designed specifically for women and located in the communities from which they come (to enable them to maintain relationships with children and family members and to support active resettlement), and delivering rehabilitation and education programmes tailored to their specific needs, would be more effective. Such units do not currently exist. Meanwhile, fostering the development of women’s centres and services will enable more women to be managed constructively in the community.

How much would a different approach cost the taxpayer?

There are compelling economic reasons to foster alternative approaches:

- The average annual cost of a women’s prison place is £56,415⁶⁵ compared to a Community Order cost of £2,800 per year, and an average of £1,300 for standalone community-based services.⁶⁶
- Research by the independent thinktank the new economics foundation (nef) found that if alternatives to prison reduce reoffending by just 6%, the necessary expenditure would be recouped in a year.⁶⁷ The benefits are worth more than £100 million over a ten-year period.⁶⁸ The nef found that money invested in support-focused alternatives to prison generates significant benefits for women and their children, victims and society over ten years.⁶⁹

- Imprisoning mothers for non-violent offences costs the state more than £17 million over a ten-year period as a result of the increased likelihood of their children becoming NEET (not in education, employment or training), and therefore have poorer long-term prospects. Non-custodial sentences therefore lead to additional savings to the state.⁷⁰

Note on the numbers

Prison statistics can be confusing. There is a difference between a ‘snapshot’ of the prison population, usually recorded mid-year, and the total intake of prisoners over the course of an entire year. In England and Wales, for example, there are approximately 3,900 women in prison at any one time,⁷¹ yet around 9,000 women are received into prison for the first time over the course of a year, either on remand or under sentence.⁷² The ‘snapshot’ figure will have a higher proportion of those on longer sentences, while the total annual intake will include all those who have been sent to prison even for very short periods. Also, sometimes information is given for prison numbers in England and Wales, and sometimes for the whole of the UK, including Scotland and Northern Ireland.

Feedback

We welcome queries and comments on the information provided here, and plan to update and supplement the information as needed. Please contact womensprogramme@prisonreformtrust.org.uk

The Prison Reform Trust publishes updated facts on the prison population twice a year, including facts about women. To find the latest version visit www.prisonreformtrust.org.uk/Publications/Factfile

This briefing has been prepared as part of the Prison Reform Trust’s three year programme to reduce women’s imprisonment, funded by the Pilgrim Trust.

Download Brighter Futures - working together to reduce women’s offending

To stay in touch with the progress of our work to reduce the unnecessary imprisonment of women sign up for our newsletter and see www.prisonreformtrust.org.uk/women

Endnotes

- ¹ Ministry of Justice (2013) Transforming Rehabilitation: A strategy for reform London: MoJ
- ² Hansard 25 March 2013 column 916
- ³ House of Commons Justice Committee (2015) Women offenders: follow-up London: TSO
- ⁴ Prison Reform Trust (2013) Reducing women's imprisonment – Action Pack London: PRT
- ⁵ The Fawcett Society has conducted an enquiry: www.fawcettsociety.org.uk/wp-content/uploads/2013/03/2006-Annual-Review-of-the-Women-and-the-Criminal-Justice-Commission.pdf. Breaking the Silence: Women's Imprisonment, London Strategic Policy Unit, 1985. For the Scottish Government Commission on Women Offenders, known as the Angiolini report see www.scotland.gov.uk/About/Review/commissiononwomenoffenders/finalreport-2012
- House of Commons Justice Committee (2013) Women offenders: after the Corston report London: TSO
- Ministry of Justice/ NOMS (2012) A distinct approach: A guide to working with women offenders London: MoJ
- House of Commons Justice Committee (2013) Women offenders: after the Corston report London: TSO
- Bangkok Rules*, adopted 6 October 2010 www.un.org/en/ecosoc/docs/2010/res%202010-16.pdf
- UN Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (2013) Concluding observations on the seventh periodic report on the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland CEDAW/C/GBR/CO/7 26 July 2013 <http://www.ohchr.org/EN/NewsEvents/Pages/DisplayNews.aspx?NewsID=14514&LangID=E>
- ¹² As of December 2013, Simon Hughes MP is the Minister of State for Justice and Civil Liberties with responsibility for female offenders
- ¹³ www.justice.gov.uk/publications/policy/moj/strategic-objectives-for-female-offenders
- ¹⁴ See www.justice.gov.uk/transforming-rehabilitation and the Offender Rehabilitation Act
- ¹⁵ Hansard HL, 25 March 2013 c916
- ¹⁶ Hansard HC, 27 March 2014 c52WS
- ¹⁷ Hansard HC, 2 July 2013 c750
- National Offender Management Service (2013) Women's custodial estate review London: NOMS
- ICM Opinion Poll for the Corston Coalition, (26-28 November 2010). Sample of 1000 adults 18+ in GB, by telephone omnibus.
- www.swmprobation.gov.uk/2012/12/18/womens-centres-reduce-reoffending/ See also Radcliffe, P. et al (2013) The development and impact of community services for women offenders: an evaluation London: ICPR
- Prison Reform Trust (2007) Public say: stop locking up so many women London: PRT
- Table 2.2b Ministry of Justice (2015) Offender Management Statistics (quarterly) October-December 2014 London: MoJ
- Table A2.2a, Ministry of Justice (2015) Annual tables – Offender management caseload statistics 2014 London: MoJ
- Tables 1.2a and 1.2b, Ministry of Justice (2015) Offender Management Statistics (quarterly) October-December 2014 London: MoJ
- ²⁵ Table 2.2b, ibid
- ²⁶ Ministry of Justice (2012) Prisoners' childhood and family backgrounds, London: MoJ
- ²⁷ Janet Loveless (2010) Domestic Violence, Coercion and Duress, Criminal Law Review, pp. 1-3
- ²⁸ Women's Aid (2006) Why Doesn't She Leave? available at www.womensaid.org.uk/domestic-violence-articles.asp?section=00010001002200410001&itemid=1277&itemTitle=Why+doesn%27t+she+leave
- ²⁹ Ministry of Justice (2012) Prisoners' childhood and family backgrounds, London: MoJ
- ³⁰ Light, M. et al (2013) Gender differences in substance misuse and mental health amongst prisoners London: MoJ
- ³¹ Cabinet Office Social Exclusion Task Force (2009) Short study on women offenders London: Cabinet Office
- ³² Caddle, D. & Crisp, D. (1997) Imprisoned women and mothers Home Office Research Study 162 London: Home Office
- ³³ Hansard HC, 16 July 2012 c548W
- ³⁴ Wilks-Wiffen, S. (2011) Voice of a child London: Howard League for Penal Reform. 54% of all prisoners reported having children under the age of 18. See www.gov.uk/government/uploads/system/uploads/attachment_data/file/162361/prisoners-childhood-family-backgrounds.pdf
- ³⁵ Paul Vallely (2012) 'Mothers and Prison: The Lost Generation', The Independent, 20 September, available at: www.independent.co.uk/news/uk/crime/mothers-prison-the-lost-generation-8157387.html
- ³⁶ Prison Reform Trust (2013) Prison: the facts – Bromley Briefing Summer 2013 London: PRT

- ³⁷ Prison Advice and Care Trust (2011) Protecting the Welfare of Children When a Parent is Imprisoned: A Report Highlighting Concerns that up to 6,000 Children a Year are Being Forgotten by the System When Their Mother is Sent to Prison London: PACT
- ³⁸ Ibid
- ³⁹ Research by the Revolving Doors Agency at HMP Holloway reported in Cabinet Office Social Exclusion Taskforce (2009) Short study on women offenders: Making government work better London: MoJ
- ⁴⁰ Hansard HC, 7 January 2010, c548W
- ⁴¹ Hansard HC, 25 November 2009, c238W
- ⁴² Women in Prison (2013) State of the Estate London: WiP
- HM Inspectorate of Prisons (2000) Unjust Deserts London: TSO
- May, C. et al (2008) Factors linked to reoffending: A one year follow up of prisoners who took part in the Resettlement Surveys 2001, 2003 and 2004 London: MoJ.
- Light, M. et al (2013) Gender differences in substance misuse and mental health amongst prisoners London: MoJ
- Home Office (2007) The Corston Report London: Home Office
- Ibid
- www.gov.uk/government/publications/gender-differences-in-substance-misuse-and-mental-health-amongst-prisoners-2
- Department of Health Conference report: Sharing good practice in prison health 4/5 June 2007 available at http://webarchive.nationalarchives.gov.uk/20080814090248/http://dh.gov.uk/en/Publicationsandstatistics/Publications/PublicationsPolicyAndGuidance/DH_078070?IdcService=GET_FILE&dID=147615&Rendition=Web
- Table 3, Ministry of Justice (2015) Safety in custody Quarterly Update to December 2014 London: MoJ
- Home Office (2007) The Corston Report London: Home Office
- Prison Reform Trust (2012) Bromley Briefings Prison Factfile November 2012 London: PRT
- Table 2b, National Offender Management Service (2012) NOMS Equalities Annual Report 2011-12 London: NOMS
- Hansard HL, 20 May 2013, c633
- Table 1.8, Ministry of Justice (2015) Offender Management Caseload Statistics Quarterly Bulletin, October – December 2014, London: MoJ
- Hales, L. & Gelsthorpe, L. (2012) The criminalization of migrant women Cambridge: Institute of Criminology
- Table A2.3, Ministry of Justice (2014) Annual tables – Offender management caseload statistics 2013 tables London: MoJ
- Table A2.1, Ministry of Justice (2015) Annual tables – Offender management caseload statistics 2014 London: MoJ
- ⁵⁹ Table A5(f), Ministry of Justice (2011) Adult reconvictions: results from the 2009 cohort London: MoJ
- ⁶⁰ Ministry of Justice (2011) Compendium of reoffending statistics and analysis 2011 London: MoJ
- ⁶¹ Hedderman, C., & Jolliffe, D. (2015) 'The impact of prison for women on the edge: paying the price for the wrong decisions', Victims and Offenders: An international journal of evidence based research, policy and practice. DOI
- ⁶² The Sainsbury Centre for Mental Health (2009) The Chance of a Lifetime: Preventing Early Conduct Problems and Reducing Crime London: Sainsbury Centre for Mental Health
- ⁶³ Radcliffe, P. and Hunter, G. (2013) The Development and Impact of Community Services for Women Offenders: An Evaluation London: ICPR available at www.icpr.org.uk/media/34025/ReportNuffieldfinal.pdf
- ⁶⁴ Ministry of Justice (2015), Justice Data Lab Reoffending Analysis: Women's Centres Throughout England London: MOJ
- ⁶⁵ Hansard HC, 4 April 2011, c641W
- ⁶⁶ new economics foundation (2012) Women's community services: A wise commission London: nef
- ⁶⁷ new economics foundation (2008) Unlocking Value: How we all benefit from investing in alternatives to prison for women offenders London: nef
- Ibid
- Ibid
- Ibid
- ⁷¹ Ministry of Justice (2014) Population bulletin – Weekly 6 June 2014 London: MoJ
- ⁷² Ministry of Justice (2014) Annual tables – Offender management caseload statistics 2013 London: MoJ

June 2015