

He's Changed

I think he's gonna change, that lovely man of mine,
He's serving time in prison and it seems he's doing fine.
He used to be a bully and a vehicle of abuse,
Very narrow minded and quite stubbornly obtuse.

A malevolent beast, a monster they said, but I knew he was neither,
You can spot a fine heart and sense a good vibe, it writes itself in the ether.
I knew that soon, all would see, this man was good at the core,
The dawn would come when all would gasp at how I was so sure.

He used to be so terribly brash and thoughtless of his crime,
Now cracks of love and seams of kindness are showing all the time.
These current days his smile is warm and touch, oh so gentle,
He's become possessed with thoughtful mind, loving and sentimental.

"That man of yours will never change". That's what they used to say,
"Find another, one who cares, with whom you'll want to stay."
I was malcontent to these wagging tongues, acquiescence I would not be fed
My guns stuck fast, my hand dithered not, only private tears I shed.

So sweet this change, this wonderful adjust that now has come about,
Up to the roof tops I want to go and to all I need to shout,
"He's changed, He's changed," I told you so, it's sad when no one listens,
But now I'm happy, he's a diamond smoothed, through muddy water glistens.

From all this delight and merriment I'm feeling light and feint,
I'm swooning at the lovely thought of a sinner becoming a saint.
Now he writes such kindly words, even odes of love he's sent.
From rogue and scoundrel he has become a decent and loving gent.

Having faith sometimes it's valuable, particularly in someone you love,
Who once was unkind, somewhat maligned, but now a conciliatory dove.
A dove of peace and harmony who once sung a sad sad song.
Who's changed his ways and happily chants of wanting to belong.

Soon my man will be from within and into my loving arms,
I'll hone his heart, caress his love and embrace his new found charms.
I'll have that man that hid away, to others he may seem strange.
But he's the man I've always loved the one that will never change.
